The following quote is from the testimony of Guillaume Bignon: a French atheist and scientist who has become a theologian.

> So I started thinking about the whole thing. What good reason was there to think God exists, and what good reason was there to think atheism was true instead?
>
> This step was important, because my own unbelief was comfortably resting on the fact that (smart) people around me didn't believe in God either, but it was more a reasonable life assumption than the conclusion of a solid argument.
>
> ...
>
> Here was an obviously educated man, who believed these incredible things about God and Jesus, and I progressively started to consider that all of this could possibly be true.
>
> ...
>
> So I accepted the whole thing: I placed my trust in Jesus, and asked Him to forgive me in the way the New Testament promised He would.
>
> Guillaume Bignon, "How God turns a French atheist into a Christian theologian"
